She will be wearing it to a family reunion in July, when I showed her how to fix a few wrong ends. This is a pattern for the grownup version of Michael's Nose Purses, which I made for my youngest grandchild (who is about to turn 2). It's knit in sock yarn from BabyTic.Q: Would it be valid to assume that there is no light before light? If light is like a wave, and everything around us is made of waves, might not the universe be filled with waves the day before the Big Bang? Are there then waves everywhere, and nothing else? A: Light is a wave. Even your question is about waves. The things that are always there are things like electrons that are particles. You can't talk about anything before the Big Bang, though. The Big Bang happened at an extremely high energy. We can't even really use that word "before" - it might have been about  $10^{70}$  years long. A: It's true that there must have been a time when the gravitational fields were strong enough to create conditions for particles to 50b96ab0b6
