UDL/DI Lesson Plan Elements

UDL/DI Teaching Method	Supportive Differentiated Instruction Feature(s)
Provide multiple examples.	In preparation for this lesson, the teacher created multiple examples of finding and identifying seeds. Additionally, the teacher provided several examples of finding appropriate texts/websites to complete the assignment. Students have multiple examples of texts from which to find information about the life cycle of seeds. As another example, fast growing seeds were planted in the classroom, giving students the opportunity to observe the seed life cycle.
Highlight critical features.	Teacher provides critical information for the lesson through oral presentation and highlights critical features in written form, then monitors students to check their focus on important features of the lesson. Additionally, by having texts available in digital format, the teacher or students may literally highlight critical features of the text in preparation of lesson assignments.
Provide multiple media and formats.	The teacher located several (4–5) resources, in this case -- books of different reading difficulty, containing the same science constructs on seed life cycles. The books were then made available digitally as well as in audio format for flexible accessibility. Thus, materials were available in a variety of media and formats.
Support background context.	Several levels of preparation were designed to support background context: • Before this assignment the teacher and students found seeds in a variety of vegetables and fruits. In this way, the concept of seeds was brought out of the abstract; students had experiences seeing and finding seeds from a range of plants. • Careful instruction was organized to teach students the concept of finding a book that is "just right," helping students to find a book that is challenging, yet not too difficult. This, helped keep students work and learn in their "zone of proximal development" when obtaining background information for the lesson.
Provide opportunities to practice with support.	• Students had the option to work in selected pairs as they search for answers to the science questions. • During guided practice and independent practice portions of each lesson, the teacher provides supports by checking and prompting.
Offer flexible opportunities for demonstrating skill.	The design of this lesson allows students varied approaches throughout the lesson. Students may select their best or preferred type of working situation and means for responding.
Offer choices of content and tools.	The teacher organized the lesson at multiple points for choice of tools: • choice of resource materials,
